BEWDLEY,

BEWDLEY, a small market town, situated 127 miles from London, and 14 from Worcester. It consists of one main street, and several smaller ones. It is a remarkably clean and highly respectable place. The parish Church of Ribbesford is a venerable pile of building, and bears altogether the appearance of great antiquity. The living is in the gift of the Rev. Edward Winnington Ingram, M.A., sen., and incumbency of the Rev. Edward Winnington Ingram, M.A., jun. There are various places of worship, public schools, and alms-houses. The horn trade is carried on to a considerable extent; combs, lanterns, powder flasks, drinking horns, and a variety of other articles, being manufactured from that commodity. The local affairs of the place are managed by a Mayor, Aldermen, and 12 Councillors. The neighbourhood of Bewdley is remarkably beautiful and picturesque, and the approach to it, over a substantial bridge of three arches, is exceedingly good, from which spot the town is seen to much advantage.
